March 20th, which was the public day of the Art department. Prof. Charles H. Burkholder, orator of Art exhibitions in the Art Institute, Chicago, for the past twenty years spoke. His theme was varied phases of art, including war art and war artists. Carol, the French landscape painter and his works were explained in a very interesting manner. Prof. Burkholder is a fluent and charming speaker. He held the rapid attention of the audience throughout the running current of his talk which was punctuated by bits of humor; this relieved it of any monotony. The lecture was especially interesting on account of the simplicity and applicability of human association of art in life, and he dwelt especially on influence of art in the home.
